Monday Jan 5-1920.

Special work.

Arrived at the Plant at 6-50. This morning, after going through the regular routine as others did regarding employment I was assigned to the Machine Shop.

The Foreman of the Machine Shop had me wait until he could see the Master Mechanic, relative to the duties I was to perform.

During the time I was standing around in the Machine Shop waiting for instructions, I noticed almost every man in the shop standing at his Machine with his hands in his pockets, account of it being cold in the Shop. If some of the window pains were replaced in the windows it would help to keep in the heat and make it a more comfortable place to work in, and result in more work being turned out.

I was assigned as helper to Repairman Anderson who receives his orders from the Machine Shop Foreman, we worked together during the entire day in numerous departments about the Plant.

I payed strict attention to my work all day, being the first day in the plant, I did not want to arouse any suspicion in the part of any of the employees.

6-P.M. the whistle blew and work was finished for the day, I washed up left the Plant and discontinued.
